

I have not taken a photo since 1957. But my trip to India this winter seemed to demand some snaps. Every day a car and professional driver came to my guest house in Calcutta to fetch me to give a lecture, so I spent hours in heavy lurching traffic, looking out the car window at the most fantastic scenes. One day I recalled that my cell phone has a camera. As the car jolted too much to permit looking at the viewfinder until a good scene appeared, I resorted to holding up the camera to the car window, and snapping at random. These may not satisfy the expert photojournalists out there, but here is a selection, all from January 3, 2006.

CALCUTTA 2005-6

CELL PHONE SNAPSHOTS RALPH ABRAHAM

In the back seat of a Classic Ambassadors. January 3, 2006.

The view from my balcony.

*Ramakrishna Mission
Institute of Culture.
December 27, 2005.*

